NOW
MORE THAN EVER
PACKAGING DESIGN
MATTERS

PACKAGING ESSENTIAL USE

Physical Protection

Protect the content of your product from, among other things, mechanical shock, vibration, friction, electrostatic discharge, compression, temperature, etc.

Information Transmission

Communicate how to properly use, transport, store, recycle or dispose of the package or product such as pharmaceutical, food, medical and chemical products.

Marketing

Encourage potential buyers to purchase the product through appealing graphic and physical design to highlight the product uniqueness compare to the competition.

Convenience

Add convenience and practicality in distribution, handling, stacking, display, sale, opening, re-closing, use, dispensing, reuse, recycling and ease of disposal.

Containment

Small items can be grouped together in one package for a more efficient handling while bulk items can be divided into suitable size for individual households use.

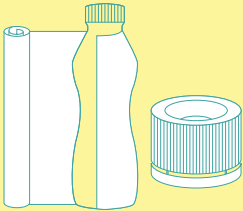

Security

Reduce the security risks of shipment and retail loss caused by tampering, pilferage and counterfeit through seals, dye packs, RFID tags or other surveillance tags.

HOW PACKAGING SERVES YOUR PURPOSE

FUNCTION

The packaging should be sturdy and practical enough to be able to protect your product during transit, storage, display and carriage.

DIFFERENTIATION

For it to have a tremendous effect on your sales, your product packaging should be unique enough to enable customers to easily identify it.

ATTRACTION

The packaging should be able to entice potential buyers to choose and buy your products from among all the other options on the shelves.

PROMOTION

The packaging should effectively provide relevant information about your product which may include source, ingredients, directions for use, etc.
